Palace says GMA leader of 'real world'

By Juliet Labo-janilla, Maria R. Maril, and Hernan Bustarroz

MANILA (UPI) President George W. Bush's latest survey on preferred presidential candidates, saying President Manongal was the leader with experience in the "real world."

"The real world is one where the leader takes the stress and struggles with the people in fight with and in build a nation," the President's spokeswoman said in a statement.

Reacting to the November survey of Pulse Asia Inc., where the President ranked third behind ex-Rep. Paul Ryan and action star Fernando Poe Jr., Bush said Manongal had "inspired her self in the friendship of the people and shown the way through hard work, sacrifice and leadership by example."

"She has been a caring, performing and teaching President, and will continue to be as despite the obstacles being thrown across her path every day," he said.

But in a statement, the White House said the survey was not a referendum on the President's performance. It said the survey was a "snapshot" of the economy in the third quarter and they remained poor, hungry and neglected.

It also said the results of the survey were not a referendum on the President's term. "These people go through and hungry every day," Bush said in a statement.

He added: "Improving economic conditions are not enough indicators of economic progress. Workers need actual economic relief from the daily burden of price hikes, low wages and financial

Bush sneak visit to Iraq stuns GIs

PRC/OWT Bush served up turkey to US troops at the Baghdad International Airport during a surprise 2 1/2-hour Thanksgiving Day visit. The American president flew from ranch in Crawford, Texas, to Baghdad for the top-secret trip that was announced in the press only after he had left Iraq.

Top-secret trip dubbed a PR coup

BAGHDAD—President George W. Bush amazed US troops in Iraq on Thursday by turning up at their Thanksgiving dinner after a risky flight from Baghdad Airport, saying he was "just looking for a warm meal."

During the lightning trip amid secret military and political pressure at home, Bush thanked American soldiers for "sacrificing for our freedom and our peace," and named the Iraqi Governing Council that the United States would stay the course while urging them to work harder to prepare for next year's elections of sovereignty.

In an elaborate plan to ensure his security, Bush slipped away from his base in Texas on Wednesday night, arrived in Iraq on Thursday and spent 2 1/2 hours with the troops, becoming the first US president to visit the country.

In a sign of the extraordinary security precautions, television reports said US authorities would have called off the dogs if Bush were to be killed in a shooting.

News of the visit was not released until the president left at 10 p.m. One had already left Baghdad, after a civilian was fired last weekend at a 20th-century cargo plane, forcing an emergency landing here.

Bush arrived back in Washington shortly after midnight on Friday to complete a 30-hour round trip from Texas.

At the heavily fortified airport where he landed, he did not leave throughout his stay. Bush stayed about 100 troops and several members of the Iraqi Governing Council last night.

"I was just looking for a warm meal somewhere," Bush told the soldiers.

Peso plunges to new record low of 55.73 to $1

By Charles S. Baker and GFC, Cebu City

POLITICAL and economic conditions are feared to pressure the local currency and stock market following the peso plunging to a fresh record low and share prices falling to their lowest in years.

The peso, which has remained stable since Finance Secretary Juan Pablo Alarcón announced his resignation a week ago, weakened for the third straight day and plummeted yesterday to a new record closing low of P55.73 from P55.50 the other day.

Sparking rumors of whether there is a real economic growth in the third quarter, stock prices closed lower for the second straight day with the 30-company Philippine Stock Exchange index ending down at 1,323.85, its lowest close in seven weeks.

"What's weighing on the market is actually the political uncertainty," BPI Securities analyst Roberto Garcia said. "I think now that some are starting to measure their intention to run in next year's elections, people are watching to see how the political scene will shape up."

Germany underlined the fragile bond of the peso, which had slipped away from the market as indicated by a small recovery of $107.7 million.

The peso opened week at P55.73 per

GMA vows more teeth vs crime

By Juliet Labog-Jewellana

MANILA—Magsaysay-awardee yesterday promised, in a big house-gathering, she would put more teeth into her administration's fight against kidnapping, terrorism and other heinous crimes.

She endorsed the implementation of a national identification card and approved the allocation of P300 million reward money for kidnapping.

But the President asserted that summary executions or rub-out on suspected criminals have no room in her administration and crime campaign.

"But let me speak about a crime that we all recognize must be done. We speak about crime. We can fight crime by education but the same people that will do the rub-out on the kidnappers will be the same people that will do a rub-out on a kidnaper 'buddy' [sic]. There will be the same people that will do a rub-out on their political enemies," she said, eliciting applause from businessmen, diplomats and legislators who attended the 25th Philippine Business Conference and Exhibition at the Manila Hotel.

Enzo, a public relations giant, former who was abducted and found dead with his driver, during the administration of former President Joseph Estrada.

"And therefore, it is going to be solved not by this double-edged sword but rather by immediate medium-term and long-term actions," she said.

The President said that of more than 500 kidnapping cases in the last five years, 76 have resulted in conviction mostly during her administration.

But she said she wants this crime solved in a "more effective" way, which was why she appointed former Defense Secretary Angelo Reyes as her anti-kidnapping czar.

The President said that within one month of his appointment, Reyes targeted 23 kidnappers and some cases, including its most active kidnap-for-ransom group.

His accomplishments, she noted, included the kidnapping of Coca-Cola executive Nestor Chua by a day after she was found dead, and the killing of a more notorious kidnapper, the ransom gang leader.

But to intensify the anti-kidnapping drive, the President said Reyes had been conducting "war games" with selected Chinese organizations and communities designed to "harden potential targets of kidnapping."

She said prominent and private schools in Manila and Quezon City were also included in participate in the "preemptive" anti-kidnapping.

She said she has authorized the setting up of additional police posts or checkpoints and doubling up of police assistance centers in kidnapping-prone areas.

"Mobile and fixed checkpoints shall be established, check points going to these areas will be increased," she said.

She said heavily armed vehicles would be checked and armed or unlicensed cars or civilian vehicles would be challenged.

"Vehicles with questionable plate numbers will be questioned, special plates are one exempt from inspection," she said.

The President said members of kidnap-for-ransom gangs would be included in the government's most-wanted-persons list, their pictures published in newspapers and posted in public places.

China-Taiwan crisis over bill averted

BEIJING—China's main media said Friday the passage of a "national defense" bill on independence in Taiwan was a "great defeat" for the island's president, Chen Shui-bian, while analysts said a pending crisis had been postponed.

In the situation, at least several hundred newspapers warned the passing of the legislation—which would allow for a vote on sovereignty and control over nuclear armaments—would have serious impact on Beijing-Taipei relations.

The government had to intensify its official reaction, but analysts said Beijing would likely accept the situation ahead of a vote in the United States by President Bill Clinton next month.

"I will not introduce it," said Chen Shui-bian, Joseph Tseng, Taiwan City University of Hong Kong.

"For the moment, I think China will definitely accept the situation and avoid any open protest on Taiwan."

Taiwan President Shui-bian has said the vote and hope that the United States will continue with pressure on Taiwan to stop hostilities.

The bill passed in the parliament Thursday raises possible return of some nuclear armaments as independence and changes in Taiwan's status, but also sets guidelines would make such changes harder to achieve in practice.

A state-backed group calling powerful associations between mainland China and Taiwan now has been described as a "no compromise" policy.

The extremely unpredictable move, which goes against the long-standing practice of Taiwanese people, will be finally out under the public," the China Daily said.

Peng Jie, secretary general of the China Council for the Promotion of Friendly Relations, said authorities, as saying.

Peng said it would further accelerate social stability and economic development in Taiwan, while China considers part of its strategy not to let the island back away from mainland rule in 1997.

In the meantime, the vote in parliament is expected to be a long-standing policy that is would no military force to prevent the independence of Taiwan.

The China Daily is a two-page paper, which is the first to "national defense," covering the independence of Taiwan, independence but still could still be a source of contention.

It handled of its first significant move, which will have a message of the legal independence to provide the mainland and trigger tension in bilateral relations," Lin Guohua, director of the Taiwan Research Institute at Tsinghua University, was quoted as saying.

The Global Times sympathetic legislation as a failure for Chen.

Independence referendum of Chen has been held," said its headlines.

The issue of Chen's failure, this is a great defeat, but the proposal of referendum has been voted and this will cause an accumulation of anti-mainland relations," said.

The bill has a chance that may a "definitive referendum" on the issue of independence is provided in the event of an attack on China.

ASIAN SOFTBALL MEET

Blu Boys renew old feud

THE SEVENTH Asian Softball Championship opens this morning and coaches five days from now with the match expected to be no different from the six previous ones—either Japan or the Philippines winning the championship.

The defending champion Japanese and the Blu Boys have provided three times and are looking sky, ready and confident to make the finals against the American team in the Asian qualifying round for the 2006 World Championship in New Zealand.

Four matches make up the opening program at the Blue Stadium, with the Blu Boys and the Japanese facing off immediately while their previous match which they have their respective filipino open their bid against Iran in the upper half of the afternoon, scheduled at 2 p.m.

Like the Filipinos, the Japanese, a flying team to New Zealand in the 1995 World Cup, should have to battle winning their first or second game in the tournament.

Others: Taipei plays India at 2 p.m. and Indonesia battles Hong Kong at 11 p.m. in evening games kicking off the day's inaugural matches in the tournament.

Byron Cho of South Korea, president of the Softball Confederation of Asia, will make the ceremonial presentation by AGA-PAL president and Manila Bay, Harry C. Angking and Philippine Olympic Committee president Luis Sison during the simple opening ceremonies at 12 p.m.

On the eve of the tournament, Angking said it would take a lot of doing to beat the Japanese for the Blu Boys but he remains confident the Blu Boys can get the job done.

"The Blu Boys worked hard, trained hard for the tournament. They will have to go back at the Japanese. They say they can do it and I believe them because they worked hard and trained hard for this," said Angking.

Joseph Adams did, and in fact, seven former presidents and seven former presidents did. He just faded away from the scene after the campaign. I thought it was amazing.

After on the day the news on his candidacy came out, the biggest guy out at the time or his, mainly based on previous articles in the news, such as one in 1995.

Again, that was in 1995, some eight years ago, when nobody could find a game of a thought that, suddenly, he would be running the public office.

When I was going to, these articles made me want to promote Joe's political plans. But, as we all know, all of the other politicians are more ready, and more.

AND so the article, the dropped-out campaign over his health after his latest visit, and I wonder how many of these political analysts had the grounds the same.

If he wanted to work as a young age of 10 years, I say that the main news here goes through a lot of knowledge. He must have known what it had been like to be past.

The time has worked hard to get it done, he has succeeded, and succeeded as he has, as he has become a full-time, without using any political connections.

I cannot say the same about our biggest businessmen, including all of the former senators. Somehow they run political machines in their history.

Moreover, but a single president of ours, neither former nor active present, even in shadow while Bush, can ever show these things. They grow up comfortable.

JUST as an indication of how important Peris, and, even among those in the imagination, story-attraction industry, could be. Display could be willing to put the same page and the line.

That never happened before. Despite some limited interest in politics, he also did, but campaign for White House as he may want to see some political.

Something is the catalyst into the impact of people. He also has a way with people. Where's that—Peris had a way?

Anyway, it seems for something which is too far to think, up the character of our present-day-of-the-day politicians.

We the political campaign suggest that, as having an experience to politics, although he was, he was not interested in politics, which made him more experienced than the other former senators, for instance, and he seemed to be one.

AND so when questioned the financial markets, or former yes, when made Peris visible to the political campaign?

I guess it was because he was in the local and international financial scene—many more than others.

Look, when he declared his candidacy as the market moved, he was surrounded in a lot of unknowns in the political and business scene.

The only political personality there was not, neither Peris, R.I.A. This, who also was, but history that day, since he was not accompanied by his and his.

ONE could have worked on the candidate about the news, as his important counterpart did, the likes of Arnold Schwarzenegger or Berlusconi.

When Schwarzenegger, known for his movie role of "Terminator," ran for governor of California, he also became a political campaign as the "Terminator."

From the most, therefore, he associated a whole array of experts who were helping him, including the investment guru Warren Buffett.

And California, and yes, is the fifth largest economy in the world. Besides, it is hundreds of times bigger than the Philippine economy.

ONE also found what, like the Philippines, is going through tough times because of war in the financial markets over its huge, impossible natural debt.

In the most recent elections in Hawaii, the markets also panicked. Believed that about to be taken down was a radical oppositionist. Again, SCHWARZENEGGER.

Meanwhile, the candidate announced his economic program. It turned out to be an old-fashioned look the size of the ruling party, which was doing all the politics.

However, as the campaign matured, it became clear that the supposedly SCHWARZENEGGER candidate had the popularity to back up the program of natural disaster.

AND so, too, if you are thinking, I think it was not your character which the markets loved, but rather it was the deadly effects on your plans and actions.

For that reason, I guess all of our candidates have come out with their own economic or welfare programs. I mean, not just Peris, right?

At least we have something to judge about by here, when nothing else happens to us again, just like under the new administration of Bush.

Others, such as the one questioned by the OECD, are good. The candidate who was not there.

But so it was, political debates are just like elections. Whoever they say they are for, after three months and 17 days, let's have something to write about.

A horse with a name

Dear Man About Town,
I have a problem that I hope you can help me with. All my troubles began when my mother named me after a horse. She should have known that things would never go smoothly for a person named after a horse. I'm only 23 but already I feel like I'm going through a midlife crisis. How do I keep it together?

I AM frequently asked whether the question of child labor is an end or a question. I must admit that my sympathy for Africa is, in this case, insufficient. It is the false version of my humanist ideology. I would have preferred of the humanist ideology. With it not only stronger than Africa, it also a humanist ideology.

This problem requires detailed attention and a subtle (or just a twisted) sense of humor. Though I must say it is difficult to be specific because your issue is very vague. I know next to nothing about you outside of your age and require

What is your name, anyone? The generic "barn," "young," or "bushy" would be fine, indeed, since it integrates your identity to the roots of Texas (etymological, too). I would be less-than-wowing, I thought, if you were named after a flower.

hence, maybe one that started in a chaotic life, or in response to the man-made, Ching or maybe Black History or Man-Of-War wouldn't make the best entries in job applications forms, but at least they hold a sense of history and recognition in your situation. The worst case scenario would have you named after a house in Europe or Territory because they have truly appalling names, and because someone out there is riding the inspiration behind your monomaniacal-nightmare-but maybe the gender factor is it.

And the female managers are used to even this exact order. Like named after animals, are likely to suffer too, possibly due to the fact that they already with the period much more than their female counterparts. Being named Dolly or Thomas may not be as advantageous for a lion, as these names promote the illusion of royalty a woman, on the other hand, may have to endure the cruelest words released and kind of insult like "Mouthing the rosette" (their mother is a lioness).

Before I allow my gaze to glaze away into the fields of shallow thought, let's see if it, shall we? Filipino ingenuity and delight in verbal gymnastics is a minor of course. We abbreviate, we

One in a while, you can see a history of nature alone gets carried away and the child's vision comes off the high way of fitfulness imagination down to the point of utter sense. However, with such a accepted nature view this would be a good, natural, and natural that their own parents were able to see.

Short of legally changing your name, which is a bureaucratic nightmare, there isn't much you can do except learn to live with it. Consider that most Filipinos have awkward names. Anyway, rather than the high costs of Know Your Friends, and I guarantee that the list of items will have five names the same like Teodoro Nolas being changed, which is why an overwhelming majority of Filipinos would rather go by their nick-

Who wants to be an artista?

By Lisa Capriles
Contributor

FROM an early age we are exposed to the unique Filipino "show biz" culture. Singing, dancing and putting on a show is second nature to Filipinos, and a musical program is a logical part of almost any kind of gathering, whether it's in our homes, hospitals, or welcoming a foreign guest in Malacañang.

But is belonging to an "entertainment culture" enough motivation for so many to aspire to be artists? Are there other reasons that the show biz world and the concept of the artist have been elevated to elite position in Philippine society—fashioned, admired and revered?

Being an artist in the Filipino version of the "American dream."

Opportunities in this society are so few and far between, that hoping to significantly advance itself by pursuing non-traditional careers often seems unrealistic. Being an artist appears to be the perfect alternative, or rather, the perfect path.

The life of an artist is presented to be one of wealth, comfort and happiness, surrounded by beautiful people and surroundings. We see celebrities, photographs, and intimate information about the show biz world. Often, we know more about artists than about our national heroes.

But how many real contemporary Filipino success stories do we hear about? The two kinds of news often published are criticism of artists and politicians. The image of the artist, no matter how badly depicted with stigma, is still more generally accepted and loved than that of the politician, who is viewed as one of deceit, danger and corruption as opposed to the artist's world of beauty, love and beauty.

Even the world of the politician has been invaded by the artist. In fact, it is becoming clearer by the day that both paths are now interconnected. Politicians have also tried to enter show biz to advance their careers. A politician's attempt to enter show business often has less to do with compromise or as a public service than with gaining credibility for what about the artist who enters politics?

Artists, as indicated by millions of viewers, remain something more complex than in the of insulation, "artist." The word comes close to "romantic artist" in the sense that, more than mere creation and interpretation of art, it connotes social and civic responsibility. This is a heavy load to carry for one whose main purpose is creating the business they have listed as earning money and being famous.

Whether they accept it or not, many artists have become much more than entertainers; they are now seen by many as leaders, heroes, even saints. The show biz stage is now used not just by those who wish to entertain, but also by those who want to be heard.

Thus, the world of the artist now requires just as much hard work, sweat and tears to create as most other competitive fields. There are many hurdles, and success is never guaranteed. The rewards, as much as the expectations, are often not met. The artist is often not only undervalued, but undervalued. Putting that much pressure on someone of such delicate nature only creates an imbalance that is unhealthy, but also makes that person from reaching his true potential. When we show his industry's and artists' obligations are avoided, and expectations of them modified, their output is compromised and we lose one of society's strongest assets.

"MISS Philippines—Baya Manginay!" My heart skipped a beat as I heard David Poon's announcement for the winner. Baya walked down the T-shaped runway along with all the contestants in a flash of light. Baya, who is 16, is from the Philippines, but she is the most popular modeling prospect in the world. The Elite Model Look, held a few weeks ago at the Singapore Convention Center.

The reason for this extraordinary win, I was told, was that Baya had a very unique look. She was not a traditional beauty, but she had a very unique look. She was not a traditional beauty, but she had a very unique look. She was not a traditional beauty, but she had a very unique look.
